

The Norwegian Historic Population Register (HBR)

The site histreg.no is the open part of HBR. We also have a closed register with data from closed sources that connects to the Central Population Register of Norway that have data from the population from 1964.

The population register is documented in the scientific article:

Holden, Lars; Boudko, Svetlana. The Norwegian historic population register and migration. Journal of Migration History (ISSN 2351-9916). 4(2) pp 249-263. doi: 10.1163/23519924-00402002. 2018. . Full-text

Histreg.no is only available in Norwegian. This text described the register, the project and gives a short introduction to the histreg.no site such that it may be possible to use it without understanding Norwegian. Histreg.no gives an overview of the Norwegian population, mainly from 1801. It is based on open sources only and where we only link together information about diseased persons due to privacy.

The Historical Population Register (HBR) is a project for registering and compiling personal data from various sources, with the aim of creating an overview of Norway's population in the past.

HBR is based on all censuses, church books and other sources in the Digital Archive and links together information about the same person in several sources. In addition, a number of other sources are used. The linking is done both by automatic methods and by a large number of people. In this way, we cover the entire population from the beginning and avoid duplicates of the same person. At the same time, we never finish because the job is too large and some instances in sources we are unable to link to other sources. HBR has references to as many other sources as possible so that HBR should become a register of historical information, not replace other overviews. We want to go as far back in time as we can document in sources and follow the ancestors and descendants of people who have lived in Norway so that we can follow migration in and out of Norway.

The project was started by the Registration Center for Historical Data (RHD) at the University of Tromsø with Gunnar Thorvaldsen as project manager. HBR is run by RHD in collaboration with the National Archives, Statistics Norway, the Norwegian Computing Center, the Norwegian Institute of Local History, the Volda University College, Public Health and the University of Oslo. Currently, HBR is funded from the Research Council together with deductibles from all partners and emphasis is placed on facilitating research. HBR has significant cultural and local historical value as well as being very important to genealogists.

We want HBR to be used by as many people as possible and as documentation in many different contexts. The museum pages and reference lists are two such examples. Chris Nyborg and Lars Holden have each created their own pedigree on Local History Wiki which makes it easy to present and find their own genealogy in HBR. Anyone can register as a user and create a corresponding overview on Local History Wiki.

Data is based on the Digital Archive of the National Archive. The project is in part funded by the Research Council of Norway, grant number 225950. Users must and refer to those who created or stored the data: the National Archives and Statistics Norway. Users must send us the title and full reference to publications, research reports or educational material that uses the data or documentation. ## Description of the histreg.no site

This site is developed by Norsk Regnesentral (Lars Holden and Svetlana Boudko) and the site is run by the National Archive of Norway together with the Digital Archive. The Digital Archive has all transcribed censuses, church books and many other transcribed sources. The Archive also has many images of the sources, but this is not utilized by histreg.no. Histreg.no connects the same person and family between the different sources.

Histreg.no is openly available at internet. It is possible to apply to histreg@nr.no and ask to be a contributor. This gives the right to add information to the register. The text below translates the most important text from Norwegian to English, both the text that is available for all users and the text that is only available for contributors.
